Richardson Named President-Elect of League Executive Board

Indianola Mayor Steve Richardson has been elected President-Elect of the Executive Board of the Iowa League of Cities. Richardson has served Indianola for 15 years and became President-Elect on September 17 during the League's Annual Business Meeting, held in conjunction with their Annual Conference & Exhibit in Des Moines. The President-Elect of the League's Executive Board is typically elected President the following year.

Mayor Richardson is a past member of the Iowa House of Representatives. He's been an active member of the Indianola Chamber of Commerce, Izaak Walton League of Warren County, Des Moines Area Metropolitan Organization, and others.

Richardson brings a unique perspective from his experience as both a locally and statewide elected official. He has demonstrated a long-standing commitment to his community while working with neighbors and peers across Iowa.

The League's Executive Board is responsible for adopting policies to provide direction to the League, adopting the annual operating budget, establishing membership fees and providing direction to the organization. The Board consists of 14 board director positions and five officer positions: president, president-elect and three past presidents. All of these positions must be filled by current city officials who represent cities of various populations and geographic locations.

The League is pleased to announce Mayor Steve Richardson as President-Elect for the coming year.
